

Connexion Technologies Donates Laptops to Learning Together

Cary-based technology company's donation to help local school and day care

Cary, North Carolina, September 12, 2011 – Connexion Technologies recently donated ten laptops to Learning Together, a local nonprofit located in downtown Raleigh that meets the developmental, educational and health needs of young children of all abilities.

Learning Together offers three programs to serve children ages birth to eight; Developmental Day Program, Community Program, and the Child Mental Health Initiative. Connexion's donation of ten laptops were directed to the Developmental Day Program, a five-star licensed center, that offers inclusive educational services for children of all abilities ages 18 months to five years. Children enrolled in the program provide a diverse ability, racial, and socio-economic setting.

Prior to the laptop donation, the six teachers in the Developmental Day Program shared one desktop computer for planning purposes. With Connexion's donation, teachers can now use their planning time more effectively to complete lesson plans, students' individual educational goals and training. Students will also have access to the computers for enrichment activities.

“We are so grateful for the support from Connexion Technologies. With a laptop available in each classroom, students will have access to additional educational programs online and teachers will have the ability to work more efficiently,” said Jessica Hull, Director of Development for Learning Together. “These computers allow us to continue to provide high quality, innovative services to children of all abilities. We are so appreciative of Connexion's generosity.”

“Connexion Technologies is proud to help support such an important local organization like Learning Together, said Glen Lang, Founder of Connexion Technologies. “ We hope that the laptops will continue to serve the teachers and students of the school for several years.”
