

Connexion Technologies Creates Technology Center in Georgia Community Non-Profit

Connexion donates computers, Internet access to center serving deserving adults and youth.

CARY, N.C. (Dec. 14, 2010) – Connexion Technologies recently partnered with The Hope Center, a non-profit serving Gwinnett Estates, a manufactured home community in Loganville, Georgia. Connexion Technologies donated 12 laptops as well as high speed Internet service for the center.

The Hope Center is a community outreach ministry of Graystone Church at the Gwinnett Estates. This manufactured home community is home to more than 200 families, the majority of whom are first and second generation immigrants.

The Hope Center offers many different programs for residents in the community. One of the center's primary focuses is its after school program. Every Tuesday and Thursday during the school year, nearly 60 elementary and middle school age children come to the after school program for tutoring, homework help, games and other activities.

“The single greatest need we've had at the Hope Center this year is computers and Internet access. Most of the children in the community do not have access to a computer or the Internet at home, so we want to be a place where the kids can come and use these computers and the Internet for their schoolwork during the after school program,” said Jim Hollandsworth, co-chair of operations of the Hope Center.

“Our vision for the future of the Hope Center is to have a computer lab where children and adults in the community can come and use the computers and internet to study, do homework and practice English. This donation from Connexion Technologies will help to make this vision a reality for the residents in the Gwinnett Estates community.”

“The Hope Center is a wonderful opportunity for us to assist one of the communities we serve,” said Glen Lang, founder of Connexion Technologies. “As a leader in telecommunications infrastructure, we and our service provider partners look forward to future opportunities to give back to the communities we serve.”
